Local Intelligence.

Deaths. Died on Sunday morning, Oct. 11th, Jno. I. Ingram, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. S. E. Ingram. Tender were the aspirations felt for this child—bright were the hopes fondly cherished in the father's and mother's heart. The prattlings of infancy were the music of home—his boyhood would be his joy, promising a manhood that would bring honor and usefulness.

The remains were interred in the old DuRant burying ground. Died suddenly Sunday morning the 11th inst. Mrs. G. Mack Hicks, wife of Mr. G. M. Hicks, of Salem. We are very sorry to announce the death of this estimable lady. She was a member of the Baptist Church, and by her exemplary, pious life, has left behind her a record worthy of imitation. We tender to the afflicted husband our warmest sympathies.

Mr. R. M. Montgomery who has had a life long reputation for kindness of heart and extending sympathy to any fellow being in distress, while on a visit to the city of Charleston, saw a young man there by the name of Edward Jones from the far off North languishing on a bed of suffering and affliction from that most terrible of all diseases, consumption. Willing to cheer the closing hours of this unfortunate young man of only 20 years, who, even in his physical wreck exhibited the remains of what had so shortly before been the splendid specimen of a handsome intelligent and vigorous youth, proffered a home of comfort, surrounded by all that kindness and care could bestow. He enjoyed the beneficent change but a brief while for, rapidly growing worse, the emaciated form soon passed into the quiet of the grave. It is sad to see one die in youth, even tho' the departing spirit be cheered by the comforting presence of loved ones, but to one a stranger in a strange land it is doubly melancholy. If good deeds can light up the dark valley, Mr. M's. passage through will be illumined by many a bright trophy.

Orange Blossoms. Married on the evening of the 8th inst., by Rev. S. Leard at the residence of the brides father, Mr. Davis McElveen, of Sumter county, to Miss Mary, daughter of Mr. Jno. Hudnal. Married on Thursday, the 8th inst., at the residence of Mr. Charles Jones, to Miss F. J. ...
